CNBC's "Financial Advisors 100" based their rankings in part upon data provided by individual advisors and their firms. CNBC enlisted data provider AccuPoint Solutions to assist with the rankings by analyzing internal data points and firm filings with the SEC. The formula CNBC used to rank advisors is proprietary. Investment returns are not a component of the rankings because an advisor's returns are dictated largely by the risk tolerance of clients. The firm when invited applied for the award and not all advisors were invited or responded. The firm did not pay any fees to participate. The award was independently granted. The firm did not have to be part of any organization to be eligible for the award. The ranking should not be construed as a guarantee to any performance or service level, nor should it be construed as a recommendation from current clients.
